Operas and audiences were in marked contrast at the two performances which were given in the Metropolitan Opera Mantell at the Forty-fourth Street House yesterday. In the afternoon Theatre, the Shuberts announce that there was a representation, outside the Emma Trentini will appear with Clifsubscription, of "Carmen," and the ton Crawford in a new light opera subscription, of "Carmen," and the theatre was overfilled—using the term in its meaning as regards the common law of physical comfort as well, possibly, as in its relation to the municices in Berlin and Vienna until the law of physical comfort as well, pos-sibly, as in its relation to the munici-

It would seem as if we had here facts to warrant a discourse, not to say a preachment, and no doubt they will be utilized by some of the chroniclers of operatic small beer. But there are not conclusions to be drawn from them that are not as old as the history of opera itself. Bizet's opera is a delightful work, full of the good red blood which gives life to the lyric drams. ers, Widely Apart.

The illness of Mr. Goritz compelled a change in the list of artists who gave the opera its first performance this season, a fortnight ago. Mme. Matzenauer repeated her impersonation of Leonore, with its powerfully moving denotement of a pathos which is still without parallel in operatic literature. Mr. Urlus, too, met the delight of the museum, chiefily because of the opening of the Benjamin Altours and the J. Pierpont Morgan collections. The membership has held its own, the report says, even in a period of financial depression, and the attendance has exceeded that of other years.

Gifts have been more numerous than Matzensuer repeated her impersonation of Leonore, with its powerfully moving denotement of a pathos which is still without parallel in operatic literature. Mr. Urlus, too, met the demands of the composer acceptably, as did Miss Schumann, Mr. Braun and Mr. Reiss. Mr. Goritz's place in the cast was taken by Mr. Weil, who at short notice and in order to make the performance possible, learned the part in a day. Mr. Weil was the customary splenitive Don Pizzarro, and escaped being choked by his own rage in his first air as narrowly as any of his predecessors for decades. But we have
